TEXT:

Mr. Abderrahmane Youssoufi was born in Tangier in 1924. Before serving the Moroccan people as a prime minister, he was a human rights lawyer, activist, and advocate for immigrant workers' rights in France.

His political career launched in 1959 when he joined the National Union of Popular Forces (UNFP). The iconic politician and human rights activist faced arrest in 1959 and 1963, serving a two-year prison sentence. Mr. Youssoufi spent the next 15 years of his life in exile in Paris until he returned to Morocco to join the Socialist Union of Popular Forces (USFP). He became the party's secretary general. In 1998, King Hassan II invited him to lead his government as prime minister. His four-year term brought increased freedoms for both the Moroccan people and the media.

In 2003, He retired from politics to spend his later years in Casablanca with his wife, Helene. In 2016, the former prime minister went to the hospital with pneumonia, where he received a visit from King Mohammed VI. The socialist icon's last public appearance came in January 2020 in Fez, where he presented a book about his political experience by Driss Guerraoui, a Moroccan economist and current head of the country's Economic, Social, and Environmental Council (CESE).

In August 2019, on the 20th anniversary of his accession to the Moroccan throne, King Mohammed VI paid tribute to Mr. Youssoufi by naming a brigade of new military graduates after him. "I have decided to name this year's Group of Graduates after Mr. Abderrahmane Youssoufi, who shares with my late father, His Majesty King Hassan II, and with me the same unwavering principles: love for the homeland and a strong commitment to the nation's sacred values, to the Kingdom's territorial integrity and to the defence of its best interests," he said.

He died in May 2020, leaving a great political legacy, and so much love in the hearts of all Moroccans.
